

Jorge A. Marrero

Jorge A. Marrero, MD, MS, AGAF

Current Institution: University of Pennsylvania

Current Position: Chief, Division of Gastroenterology and Hepatology Jorge Marrero, MD, MS, AGAF, is Chief, Division of Gastroenterology and Hepatology at Perelman School of Medicine at the University of Pennsylvania. He is an expert in liver transplantation and hepatocellular carcinoma. His research interest in the early detection and risk-stratification of hepatocellular carcinoma. He has been a successful mentor to several faculty that have gone on to obtain K awards and NIH research grants in areas of liver cancer, liver transplantation, healthcare disparities, and colon cancer screening.

Dr. Marrero is a founding member of the International Liver Cancer Association and a member of the American Association for the Study of Liver Disease, American College of Gastroenterology, AGA and the National Comprehensive Cancer Network's Hepatobiliary Committee.

Dr. Marrero has lectured globally and written and reviewed numerous research articles and book chapters for publications such as The New England Journal of Medicine, The Journal of the American Medical Association, the Journal of the National Cancer Institute, and the Journal of Clinical Oncology. He served on the AGA publications committee and is an Associate Editor for Gastroenterology.